'When my last exhibition finished at Australian Galleries and while walking about in the forest, (a place of continuous inspiration) and wondering where my ceramic journey would take me next, I found a guinea fowl feather on my path.

A stunning feather of a dark black hue with white dots. Being attracted to beautiful objects I picked it up and took it to my studio, and there I placed it in front of one of my black bowls and without me knowing they started a conversation.

They spoke of patterns, of how a dot was one of the most ancient marks in the world of art and how a series of dots could create an energy field. Different energy fields. Musical rhythms. Modern melodies, mathematical equations, whole choirs, till one bowl sung the song of the universe and I was off on another journey. A journey along a path of both strong and gentle rhythms. A dance...The dance of life. The only dance there is.'
